Navigating Unchartered Territory Globally

King & Spalding's international trade team guides clients in an era where global trading relationships, supply chains, and foreign investments drive not only the economic priorities of countries, but also their national security and foreign policy objectives. This transformation of the global economy is characterized by competing social forces (including unilateralism and populism) and by unprecedented geopolitical trends that link national and economic security. All of this change occurs against the backdrop of a world shaken by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Our global team helps manufacturers and service providers advance their business interests. We work with both sovereign and private sector clients to realize their trade and investment objectives through regulatory, dispute settlement, litigation, policy, and enforcement mechanisms. We help clients secure duties on unfairly priced imports that injure company performance, expand market access for exports of goods and services, prevent products that violate IP rights from entering the market, use origin rules effectively, navigate foreign investment security reviews, and defend against trade compliance enforcement actions in the area of customs, export controls, and sanctions.
