The Daily Report asked Josh Kamin, the firm's Atlanta office managing partner, the following questions:

What is the biggest challenge in maintaining its Atlanta ties as it aims for prominence in the global legal market?

Like many of our clients, we have a strong Atlanta presence and a global reach. We are proud to have grown—like so many of our great Atlanta institutions—into a global enterprise with firm Atlanta roots. Our perspective and our portfolio of expertise in this geography, allow us to help our clients everywhere—be it locally, nationally, globally or all of the above. Our clients seek us out because we understand what it means to be a true global and Atlanta citizen.

What changes do you foresee as clients and the firm endure the impact of the coronavirus pandemic and its economic effects?

In this “post-pandemic” era, we see clients continuing to seek a counselor who is both a subject matter expert and a person with whom they want by their side in the corporate trenches. Clients are always navigating crises that may transform their business, and the pandemic only reinforced the value of being a clients' partner in solving their short-term and long-term business challenges. With so much uncertainty during the pandemic, we saw clients turn to King & Spalding because we bring them best practices and creative thinking. We have always placed a particular emphasis of pairing the right lawyer across the firm to a client's issue. Our core values and the value we bring to clients hasn't changed.
